Faculty Development Program

ICFAI School of Social Sciences and ICFAI Law School in collaboration with CUTS International are organizing a 2 Day Faculty Development Program on 'Law and Economics'. Law and economics play a crucial role in bridging legal and economic analysis, leading to more effective legal systems and policies that support economic growth and societal welfare. It equips law educators with the latest insights into economic theories and their application to legal frameworks, enabling them to teach more effectively by integrating real-world economic principles into legal studies. This approach not only enriches the academic curriculum, it also prepares students to tackle complex legal issues with a deeper understanding of economic implications. Moreover, continuous development helps the faculty to stay updated with evolving trends in both fields, promoting innovation in teaching and research by emerging contemporary issues.

The program is designed to foster interdisciplinary thinking among faculty members of economics and law, research scholars, industry professionals, regulators, and policymakers. It aims to introduce participants to the latest advancements in the fields of law and economics. The program will offer a unique opportunity to enhance the knowledge and skills to address contemporary economic, social, environmental, and legal challenges. 'Law and Economics' aims to comprehend laws, legal systems, and their institutions through the application of economic analysis.
